extrasensoryprinting

at allander our ultimate goal is sensational results.
and that involves using all the senses we've been born with – taste, touch, sight, hearing and smell.

to this mix we add something extra and that is a unique distillation of our knowledge, technical skills and years of experience.

it could be described as a sixth sense or esp, the name given to the ability to acquire information by other means.

conventionally esp is described as:

>> the ability to see what most cannot

at allander
we define
esp
as
the extra
dimension

tastethedifference

In any print job, it's not always easy to distinguish between 'good enough' and perfection. At Allander, we believe it's all about being committed to the highest standards of quality. As well as the obvious technical details, we recognise that there are many subtle nuances that make all the difference. Look at the image here for example. The exact shade of red of those chillis has been lovingly reproduced to reflect not just their colour, but also their flavour and spice. Now they're so real you can almost taste them.

Careless

Whether you are a sole trader or a global financial services company, our commitment to quality involves helping you make the right decisions. That could range from deciding on the best process, to choosing the right paper from the many options available. After all, the way your communication feels is often as important as how it looks. Throughout your project we work closely with you and are always in touch to make sure your needs are being met at every stage. In our experience good relationships are the best way to achieve tangible results.

seeforyourself

There's no substitute for a watchful eye at every development of the print process especially at the reprographic stage. From the moment your artwork arrives to final proofing, our pre press people never let it out of their sight, crucial when last minute changes are required. Their expertise and attention to detail combined with our latest spec technology ensures that what you see on the final printed page matches your creative vision.

Word on the street is that our reputation for efficiency and super fast turnaround is second to none. So naturally, our speedy response is something we like to make a noise about. Our ability to turn jobs around quickly is an integrated process that starts with listening carefully to your brief and then applying our skills and experience all the way through press production, and beyond. No matter how ridiculous the deadline, our aim is to achieve a harmonious result. Why? Because a satisfied customer is always worth shouting about.

We've got a nose for delivering a finished product that exceeds your expectations. That's because we combine the old time craft values of the print industry with major investments in the latest technological advances. This perfect blend of traditional skills and technical know how makes it possible to take a project from your initial idea to inhouse finishing using a range of up to date techniques. Mixing the old with the new in this way allows us to come up with award winning results. Smelling the roses is an experience we enjoy.

Our sixth sense comes into play when it comes to project management and ultimate quality control. From start to finish you can draw on our broad range of specialist expertise that delivers quality every time. And, because we're always attuned to what could go wrong, we'll save you time and money. More importantly we constantly explore the best way of coming up with seamless and cost effective ways of fulfilling your requirements. It's the extra dimension that adds up to your success and our personal sense of achievement.
